模範解答

There are many ways university students can use their smartphones to learn English. Firstly, smartphones allow students to develop their English listening skills. They can watch YouTube videos to learn new vocabulary and phrases. YouTube videos have subtitles, which makes them easier to understand. Students can also listen to English podcasts while walking or riding the bus. YouTube and podcast applications allow users to slow down the playback, making listening to difficult content much easier. Secondly, students can find authentic English reading materials online to study. They can read news websites or search for information in English about their hobbies. This allows students to choose what they read, making the learning process more interesting. This will help them learn English words and phrases related to their interests. In conclusion, smartphones allow students to learn through access to authentic English online. Also, the learning process becomes more interesting as they can choose which videos, podcasts, and texts to study.

模範解答

Misunderstanding can be caused by several factors. One is the lack of clear language on the side of the speaker. Messages should be spoken clearly with precise words so the listener can understand what the speaker means. However, it is common for speakers to use vague words when they cannot find the best language to describe what they mean. In other cases, the speaker may share too much or too little information. If that happens, the listener must guess what the speaker means, or imagine what information is important. Another cause of misunderstanding is the poor understanding on the side of the listener. Not everyone is a good listener. People have different levels of listening abilities. Some listeners may be interested and highly motivated to understand what the speaker says, but others may be bored, sleepy, or uninterested. Such listeners may not understand the message correctly. Thus, effective communication is very difficult. (152 words)
